

The heatmap displays a grid of colored cells representing the relationship between different factors (rows) and a target variable (columns). The color scale ranges from light yellow (low) to dark red (high). The top half of the heatmap shows a strong positive correlation (dark red), while the bottom half shows a strong negative correlation (light yellow). The middle section shows a mix of colors, indicating varying degrees of correlation.

